

ABSTRACT

Link quality control information is generated by receiving a received signal from a front end receiver. Time dispersion information is then estimated during a synchronization of the received signal. Then, link quality control information is 5 generated using the time dispersion information. The link quality control information includes information pertaining to an optimal transmission parameter. The link quality control information can be transmitted back to a unit that transmitted the received signal so that the appropriate transmission parameters may be adjusted.